

The Darren Anglin: Via Lactea Scholarship

Sometimes being extraordinary comes with consequences. Not everyone is going to appreciate and encourage your success. In fact, sometimes people will try to bring you down out of jealousy or resentment. As a result of people like this, there was a time when I found myself questioning my own character, personality, and work ethic. I thought about trying to “fit in”, speaking less, and changing the core of who I am. However, I chose to ignore the negative people and focus on the positive. In the midst of all of it I found that...

“As you let your own light shine, you unconsciously give others permission to do the same” -Marianne Williamson

In times when I least expected it, I found that there were people who saw the work I was doing and were inspired by it. It made the hard days worth it. Now that I am a graduate of the University of Georgia; I want to take the opportunity to influence students at my Alma mater who may feel like what they do goes unnoticed, or may be discouraged by people who don't understand the difficult nature of being extraordinary. This scholarship is meant to acknowledge those outstanding students that are doing positive things in the community that inspire others to be best versions of themselves.

Always Remember...
